He Didn't Say It

He Didn't Say It

In his broadcast address on the European situation, Herr Hitler seemed to have it in mind that violent language, and still more violent intonation, were what the occasion called for, and he delivered the goods according to these specifications. It was a "rabble rousing" speech and intended to be such, beyond any doubt. And in its nature quite as potent to rouse the "rabble" opposed to his policies as the Nazis who cheered themselves hoarse in the Sportspalast and all over Germany. Read in cold type, and the emotional phrases and abusive epithest deleted, it presents a good summary of the case from the Fuehrer's point of view. But hurled through the ether in strident tones, with its argument drowned in billows of vituperative oratory, it was a perfect model of the kind of speech Europe did not need at his juncture.

Its neurotic impulse aside, the practi-Its neurotic impulse aside, the practi-cally important feature of the speech was not what was said nor how it was said, but what was not said. The Feuhrer did not say his troops would march into Czechoslovakia if the Sudeten area is not handed over on Saturday. He said he would "act," but left his hearers to guess what he meant. The omission cannot have been accidental. It left an exit open by which some course other than invasion may be taken at the eleventh hour.

Plain Words in Response

If the Nazi chief was indefinite as to what precisely he means to do if his 'final' terms are not complied with, there was nothing indefinite in the assurance sent him by the British Government that sont him by the British Government that it will see that Czechoslovakia carries out its promise to give up Sudetenland in accord with the French-British proposals. And nothing indefinite in the warning note informing him as to what will follow if he implements his earlier threat to low if he implements his earlier threat to invade that country.

In the special message transmitted to Berlin, Britain unreservedly guarantees that the area will be given up by the Czechs according to the agreement they accepted. That removes the slightest suspicion or pretext that "action" by Germany is required. All the Feuhrer has to do is leave the republic alone, and he will get the territory he demands in due course, without bloodshed or cost. The fulfillment of the arrangement does not rest with the Czechs; they must keep it or their backers would withdraw their support.

The "note" tells Mr. Hitler plainly that The "note tells Mr. Hitter planny that if he forces war upon Europe he will have to deal with France, Britain and Russis as well as Czechoslovakia. Any lingering doubts or hopes he may have had on that subject are dismissed by the specific statement, amounting to a conditional ultimatum. Invasion, he is told, means war with

Where Is the Dead Line?

What is meant by "invading Czecho-slovakia"? On the interpretation of that phrase may conceivably hinge the issue of peace and war. Does it mean that Ger-man troops may not enter the Sudeton area until this has been formally ceded to Germany? Or that they may occupy this territory at once, but must not cross its borders into what is now and will be Czech territory after the transfer has been completed?

Czech territory after the transfer has been completed?

Legally of course Sudeteniand is a part of the Czech republic and will remain so until a treaty of surrender to Germany has been signed; and, it is to be supposed, until the League of Nations has consented to the re-making of the boundary it set twenty years ago. On that basis, the entry of German troops into the area would be an invasion of Czechoslovakia, involving immediate war.

But in their anxiety to avoid strife, France and Britain were disposed a week ago to waive legalities and consider the Sudeten district as open to German occupațion without this being regarded as invasion of Czech territory. If that construction still holds, Hiller may march his troops into the area without precipitating war. It is said that British and French opinion has stiffened in the meantime, and that now the borderline between peace and war is the borderline between peace and war is the borderline of the republic as it stands on the map.

It has been left to France, to decide stands on the map.

It has been left to France to decide which interpretation shall apply. The decision, it may be assumed, will depend to some extent on the indication Hitler gives some extent on the indicator fluter gives as to his intentions beyond Sudetenland. That is, on whether France is willing to trust that he would go no farther than the new boundary-to-be.

Ethiopia

From Rome comes word that the elaborate plans to colonize Ethiopia are off for the time, apparently for some considerable time. For one thing, the country is not yet pacified, and gives no promise of pacification until the natives have been of pacification until the natives have been settled on land to which they are given title. It turns out there are about twice as many natives as the Italian officials supposed, hence the task of locating them satisfactorily and with a chance of self-support in the arable parts of the moun-tainess are considered in the control of the mounsupport in the arable parts of the mountainous region is one requiring time. But until it is completed, Italian colonies cannot be located without inviting massacre.

and it is conjuect, manar comes carmot be located without inviting massacre.

The under-secretary for Italian Africa also reports that Ethiopia is not a country where Europeans can be settled speedily and with assured results as to their future. He says it will be years before the country can be got ready for colonization on any large scale. Hence II Duce is now telling the enterprising young Italians to go settle in Libya instead.
Which, considering the limited number who have gone there in the past of their own accord, does not say much for the attractions of Ethiopia or the prospect of finding there an outlet for the over-flow population of Italy which Benito is so anxious to increase.
What it all comes to is that, having

What it all comes to is that, having spent millions of lire to conquer Ethiopia, Italy will now have to spend more millions in railways, roads and what-not before the job of developing its resources can be got under way.

Latent resources, it is shown once again, are not wealth. They are only materials out of which man may create wealth by the sweat of his brow. And sometimes the reward is not worth the sweat.

Scores Crushing Victory Over Tebo For Western Championship

IT was a new Eddie Wenstob that entered the sing last night—a righter as sleek and powerful as a panther—and energied after 15 rounds with the western Canada heavyweight championship crown set at a jamity angle on his brow. But Eddie had to fight the greatest battle or his lite against the homehearted, stetchtewed Jack Teho before the final gong ended a tight which few who saw it will ever forget. A capacity crowd of 1,651 filled the Empire Theatre.

Wanstob falled to acore the knockout his camp had promised, but he did win decisively, Judges Barker and McColl and Refere Jerry Delane were unanimous in naming the flashing Viking winner by a wide margin and the crowd greefed the verdlet with cheering that was equally unanimous. One, or perhaps two at the most, were the only rounds that Tebo was able to win although he held Wenstob even throughout most of the early part of the fight.
